Dear Mr Case,

I have done my homework; it is clear you have no technical expertise in autism. For that matter, you can add the SS and education. If you don't know what you are dealing with, how can staff be trained for their special needs. You must be heavily reliant on your medical advice, this paperwork I would love to see.

Something has gone very wrong by the way probably millions have been affected by non and wrong diagnosis. If you diagnose cancer, you put together the correct treatment plan. You don't tell them it is psychosomatic and to go away and not waste your time. As happens now, "oh you naughty young person. Why don't you just behave normally". If you knew anything about spectrum kids, you would understand they do not respond normally to your norm, but comply with their natural instincts i.e., their norm.

The mountain did not go to Mohammed, you must engage, and they will follow by will. Once emotionally blocked they will only want to run away. This long-term burning cortisol in fright and flight mode, suppresses the hippocampus causing mood swings and depression to start with. Stress is literally a killer. I have seen first-hand the psychological effects on child x after restraint, physical assault, verbal bullying etc as described in my paperwork at the child's won tribunal in 2012.

If you would like to discuss any of my case study findings, I have the child's and mothers' permission to talk to you about it.

I am looking forward to some form of response.

Yours sincerely,
