Dear Prime Minister,

Thank you for finally responding to my letters. I am a bit confused as to why you have only made reference to the last few letters, and not all the ones going back to Mrs May. If all the other letters explaining the situation and plight of our spectrum kids have unfortunately been mislaid or deleted, please let me know and I will resend them. If they are still on record, then why have they not been referred to as well? The poor person who had this dumped on their desk at the Department of Health & Social Care will not have had a clue as to the reality and will obviously not have been able to do anything.

The problem is with strategic planning, Privy Council, Cabinet, and you and your predecessors. It would be impossible for a lower official to do the subject justice; after all, justice is what it is all about. You had the opportunities to rectify much of the problem whilst at No.11, and now at No.10 but you have not made the changes necessary to safeguard children with special needs. Often the trauma and lack of education will affect them adversely for the rest of their lives. Non-diagnosis, normalisation, and being labelled as naughty is not the correct way to handle these children. Clearly it would cost a great deal to rectify the system, and admittance of guilt would open the floodgates for compensation. This is no excuse however for covering it up by abusing power and as such aiding and abetting the crime.

If these children cannot comply but are left undiagnosed, they are often bullied by peers and staff, and restrained when they freak out which really does not help with their depression. They are often expelled so that the school can pass its Ofsted, over-medicated, sectioned and then locked away without charge in a secure facility for years. Alternatively, once they are excluded, they get into trouble and are jailed. Many, like Child X, are finally diagnosed but after the government has no responsibility and no cost to themselves. A parent's life can be ruined for smacking their child, yet the government can damage them for life and it's ok. There are two sets of rules and when the weight of the government wants to cover it up, there is nothing that can be done to change the situation. All of my letters and evidence is on the justice for autism website and has a wide worldwide audience so at least people now know the truth and what I am dealing with. More children than ever are now being diagnosed. It is not that we have more autistic children than before but due to the non-diagnoses over decades there will be a huge backlog. These diagnoses are driven by parents and not the state, yet there are no adequate extra facilities or training available, apart from that you do not reward naughtiness.

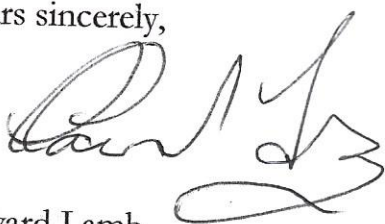

I experienced the injustice as a child and was outraged when I found out that things had got worse for these kids. You and previous governments have had multiple opportunities to rectify the system but because autistic/ADHD kids cannot defend themselves you decided to do nothing.

I have asked for an independent investigation to investigate this corruption at the top, yet the top people have clearly blocked it.

This is not how a democracy works.

I am still waiting for a correct response for my complaints.

Yours sincerely,
