Dear Prime Minister,

I am still waiting for your response. With the damage done by non- and wrong diagnosis, and the abuse continuing, silence is not appropriate given the magnitude of the situation. More and more people are going for diagnosis in all age groups, and you have to ask why they were not diagnosed when they were young. Diagnosis has helped many to understand why they don't fit into the norm and is often life changing. Yet, early diagnosis and support to help with developmental issues is just a distant hope for many.

The Chancellor says that a black hole has taken billions. Billions were wasted during COVID; the banks crash cost billions. None of this is the children's fault. Yet admitting non-diagnosis to save money would be political suicide. So, you deflect and defer, blaming everyone but yourselves, and then suppress it until it goes away. This is so wrong on so many different levels.

You will be aware by now that the justice for autism website has been viewed by millions globally. This means that you can't hide the abuse forever. I would hope for contact, but previous experience shows that unless you have no option you will ignore it. Yet your secret is out on the internet and will tend to get out of hand if not dealt with correctly.

I look forward to your response.

Yours sincerely,

Howard Lamb
